

more years to come. But I have deemed it best, under the proposed new order of things, to end my connection. The matter is settled wholly in a friendly way. I have worked hard in this theatre for the past five years. Some good work has been accomplished. The theatre stands now in the front rank and I shall always watch the future progress with interest. I shall remain in the theatrical business without interruption," continued Mr. Froehman. "I am not ready yet to divest myself of the places which I have in view."

Mr. Froehman was engaged originally by stage MacKay for this house and much of his success in the theatre he has been due to his judgment in the selection of actors and his skill in keeping the theatre during its earlier years prominent before the country.

FINE AUTUMN WEATHER AT NEWPORT.

(BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.)

NEWPORT, Sept. 2.—To-day has been delightful. Perfect autumn weather, with clear skies and cool breezes have made life a pleasure at the sea-side. Nothing could be better for out-door amusements.

President Arthur took luncheon with Mr. and Mrs. George Henry Warren to-day, and dined with Mr. and Mrs. William Astor this evening. To-morrow will be his last day here, as he leaves on Tuesday.

General Fry, U. S. A., is a guest of Captain Judson.

The Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Andeson, of England, are at the Ocean House.

Mrs. O. G. Oelrichs entertained friends at dinner last evening.

Mr. Julian Ward Howe is to play at Whiting Hall, Tiverton, Sunday afternoon.

Colonel Jerome Bonaparte has with him at present his son, Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte, of Baltimore. Madame Bonaparte and her daughter being ill, she has postponed the ball which she was to give to-night.

Admiral Compton, of the British ship Northampton, visited the Tennessee this morning and received a complimentary call.

Lieutenant L. C. Logan, U. S. N., son-in-law of Admiral Porter, has rented the Cottage of Dr. Thomas Bidle, of Philadelphia, for one year.

To-morrow at half-past 1 the wedding of Miss Cornelia DeKeoninck Dickey and the Rev. George William Douglass, of Trinity Church, New York, will take place at Trinity Church here. The ceremony will be performed by Bishop Follett and the Rev. G. J. M. Ali.

Senator Butler, of the Naval Ordnance Committee, paid a visit to the Northerners this morning. This committee will probably be summoned here again to make an official visit to the ship.

The son and the match of polo was played to-day between the Buffalo and Meadowbrook teams. The Buffaloes presented Dr. Charles Carr and J. N. Scudder, while Meadowbrook was W. K. Thorne, Jr., and Senator Mortimer. The Buffalo team won the first two games and the sixth. When the time allowed for play, thirty minutes, was up, six games had been played, three more were won by the Buffalo team, so the game was suspended. The games were not, play was estimated until a goal was made by the Meadowbrook team, thus giving them the victory in the set. The Buffalo team was far inferior to the other, their mounts, fair ponies not being nearly as fit and quick.

Mrs. Marshall O. Roberts, and family, and A. H. Sande, of N. Y., Mr. and Mrs. John Slaters and family, of Philadelphia; and Mrs. S. C. Ch. and J. E. Hale, of Boston; Mr. and Mrs. wife of Dr. George W. Thompson, and A. H. Thompson, of W. H. Thompson, of Germany, and Charles Lindt, and wife, of Paris, arrived at the Ocean House.

Mr. J. J. Miller and family, of Lexington, Ky., are at the Aqueduct House.

PASSING INCIDENTS AT SARATOGA.

SARATOGA, Sept. 2.—The Saratoga County Advertiser is still today and quite a delegation of sportsmen are on their drive, to the grounds.

Levi H. Northrop, George M. Hale and Henry F. Atwood, the county leaders representing the Board of Chancery of the state, had an adjourned session here to-day to hear appeals from awards of civil appellate cases.

John J. Ward, Jr., of Quaker Springs, is negotiating for the purchase of the Commercial Hotel, Chautauk, which has been under the management of Bryant & Hinckley, for several years.

The Woodland Guards Manufacturers' Association of the United States held a business executive session in one of the Grand Union Hotel rooms to-day.

The Rev. Dr. Francis Parsons, of New York, the Rev. Dr. L. M. Mason, of Providence, and the Rev. Dr. Edwards of Virginia, took part in the debate before the Saratoga Hotel, where a session was opened by Dr. George W. Thompson, of New York.

S. Fletcher, of N. Y., Mrs. Lowenstein, of Sandy Hill, and A. R. Howard, of New-Jersey, who are guests of the Commercial Hotel, in W. H. Thompson's champion language, paid 250 pounds each.

The costume lights will be continued here throughout the winter.

The names of the late arrivals are the following from New York and vicinity: Miss C. Carpenter, Mrs. and Mrs. T. W. Van Slyck, R. W. Townsend, Mrs. E. H. Perkins, Miss L. N. May, J. S. Scudder, Mrs. J. C. Thompson, Dr. H. H. Smith, Dr. G. Adams, Misses Graham, Mrs. E. Finch, Mrs. G. Schuyler, Mrs. Kraus, H. C. Suttle, P. Blaumauer, J. S. Willard, C. Rosenthal and family, L. S. Hart, Mrs. C. H. Hart, Dr. H. H. Smith, Dr. J. W. Parker, L. B. Stirling, J. J. Keene, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Costello, and Mrs. E. W. Nichols, Mrs. M. B. H. Hunter, Mr. and Mrs. G. Nelson, Mrs. C. M. Chapman, Dr. J. C. Thompson, Dr. F. C. French, Mrs. M. E. Head, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Collier, W. S. Vaughan, Dr. Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Thompson, Dr. G. B. Blaumauer, Dr. J. S. Willard, Dr. A. B. Thompson, Dr. G. B. Blaumauer, Dr. W. H. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. F. P. May, Mr. and Mrs. D. T. Wilson, and Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Long.

CHANCEY M. DEEPEN HOME AGAIN.

Bronzed with the coloring of sun and wind, but not a gash as ever, Chancy M. Depew landed at the Barge Office yesterday from the steamship Galia and was warmly greeted by Collector Robertson, J. B. Dutcher of the New-York Central Railroad, and other political and railroad friends. He had come home from July 2, as soon as possible Mr. Depew was speeding up the Central road to see his mother at Peekskill, and it was late in the evening that he returned to his Forty-fifth-street house. A big bank of flowers, bearing the words "We come home," rested upon the mantel of the mirror in the vestibule. The body will be taken to his birthplace, Mansfield, Conn., for burial.

WILLIAM BARTON.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas. From that time until his death he undoubtedly contributed more frequently and liberally to the funeral literature of The Globe and The Herald than did any other man in either branch of Congress. Among the eulogies delivered by him were those called forth by the deaths of Senators Thomson, of New-Jersey, Collier, Fessenden, Sumner, Wilson, Buckingham, Morton and Chandler. The last dying oration he gave eloquently of Roger Williams. In the exciting debates in the Senate during the stormy winter of 1860-1861 Mr. Anthony took very small part, and his personal relations with men of both parties remained cordial. He voted for most of the propositions looking to a compromise, but his stern loyalty to the political party whose principles he had espoused was never for a moment questioned. In the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831, Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war session" of the XXVIIth Congress, in July, 1831. Senator Anthony did very little talking.

The Naval Academy had been removed from Annapolis to Newport, and the Rhode Island Legislature had passed a joint resolution memorializing Congress to make the transfer permanent. In presenting this resolution Mr. Anthony made a strong speech in favor of the proposition. The session began on July 4, and on the 9th Senator Anthony delivered some remarks on the late Stephen A. Douglas.

William Barton, an old dry-goods merchant of New-York, died at his summer home in Stamford, Conn., on Monday. He was a son of Benjamin of New-York. He was born in Genoa, N. Y., in 1803 and died to-day in 1844, entering the dry-goods house of Herman, Ostwald & Co. After remaining there seven years he became a member of the firm of Miller, Barton & Co., and in 1834 of the house of Grant & Barton, one of the leading dry-goods firms of the city, at that time doing business in Wall Street. In 1836 he formed a co-partnership with his old comrade, and on the death of the latter, several years later, he retired from active business. He was for many years a trustee of the New-York Life Insurance Company, and until 1832 was chairman of the "war